The day of arrival and dinner at Senoji Kvorta to get to know each other

Unfortunately our plane had some technical problems so we were forced to take another plane. Because of this change we weren't able to be arriving in time and take part in the dinner.

Project work

The day started with a warm welcome from the Telsiai Adult Secondary School. After this the coordinator gave everyone a review on the last meeting which took place in Bristol.

Subsequent to the presentation of the coordinator, Martin Thomas from Yale Collage of Wrexham presented us an best practice example for low educated learners. He therefore fields different media to improve the learning processes.

At the end of the morning we started a groupwork. Our task was to design a questionnaire with which we could find out the media usage behavior of different social classes. Therefore we discussed possible questions. This groupwork made a lot of fun and because of the different ages und cultures in the group, a lot of interesting questions were found.

In the afternoon the Telsiai Adult Secondary School showed us their best practice example. They invented a method to waken pupils' creativity. Printed bookmarks show the pupils' thoughts about the meaning of literature. Objects like jugs and trees are metaphors which reflect different meanings.

After a short introduction in these different metaphors, we had a workshop in glass painting, which was very tough for me because I am not that talented.

Project work

On the second day of our project work the Austrian partner organisation, Alpen-Adria-University of Klagenfurt, inducted us into interviewing techniques. To acquaint ourselves with the techniques, we conducted interview in groups of three. We conducted all in all three interviews, so that everyone could assume the three different roles, interviewer, interviewee and observer. The role of the interviewer was the most difficult for me, because in this situation I was the one to lead the interview and think of new questions to ask.

At the end of the morning we finished our questionnaires and talked about the next project meeting. A project work plan with tasks and responsibilities was made.

In the afternoon we had a guided tour in Samogitian National Park. After our tour we arrived at a homestead where we had a very delicious traditional dinner. We let this project meeting die away with singing and dancing.

The day of departure

On the ninth of May we left from Telsiai to Germany with a lot of new experiences and acquaintanceships. I would love to take part in the next meeting, too.
